My thought: don't respond this weekend and revisit the situation on Monday

I thought the same until last night. This is one of those cases I think waiting will hurt us. But I do want to be mindful.

We are a non-political organization, so sometimes we just have to take the various views and move on. The vast majority of the community understands our roll in the world

I sent my statement to Judy Pal: She's going to suggest a few changes to shorten it up. Curious to see what she says epochtimes A Texas police department rejected a pizza party donated by Patriot Mobile after receiving public backlash on social media for accepting a gift from the conservative Christian company.

Patriot Mobile on Tuesday requested that the Grapevine Police Department donate the $1,500 gift to another department in North Texas.

"If Grapevine continues to reject the donation, Patriot Mobile asks that it be given to another police department in North Texas," the company said on Tuesday in a news release.

On Thursday, Patriot Mobile delivered a Cane Rosso restaurant gift card to Grapevine Police Department (GPD) as a gesture of gratitude for their service to the community...

How many Gv PD people in the Patriot Mobile photo are supposed to be investigating complaints filed with the PD regarding PM people and actions? I know several complaints were filed; it looks rather obvious now why none got attention from the DA. This is terrible, Bruno.

I have extremely high regard for Chief Hamlin. But I'm now very concerned about other people in that building.

We "could" stop comments but I would advise against it, as that could get us sued for violating first amendment rights. As a government agency our social channels are considered a limited public forum. We could get sued for doing so. Shutting down the pages would also stop our communication with the public, most of whom are supportive. The majority of negative posts are from other states, countries and even bots.

My professional advice is to let it ride. It will be worse in the coming days before it gets better, we just have to get through another week or so, and bury the posts with other comments

Further to my previous info from my IT guru (not Christian Ross): Amanda can delete the post she made yesterday and it will delete all of the responses to it in the process. That is step one. Next, she can change the settings on the PD's Facebook page such that any future postings must be reviewed by her/page administrator before they are posted. The board comment is from their group ousting the school board

The company helped oust the board and led to Ryan's retirement

This week we accepted a food donation from a local business, as we often do, and posted a thank you on social media. We have never questioned a donor's beliefs, we simply thank the business and move on. In this case, however, the donation brought out deep emotions and anger because of what the company represents.

Our relationships with our community are more important to us than a donation. We never intended to create distrust, and we vow to do better moving forward. We are going to re-evaluate how we receive donations in the future, and will remain open and transparent in how we do so.

As for the pizza donation we accepted this week: we could simply give it back. In the spirit of sharing what we have with others, we are opting to donate the food to another local community group. We want something positive to come from this experience, and to us, that means giving to a worthy cause.

We thank everyone who took the time to voice their opinions, and we also thank you for allowing us a day to reflect on the situation. We are not merely giving you words today – we are working to make a lasting change in how we operate so we can move forward together.

Sunday 9:23 AM

Hope you got more sleep than me. Based on a text from Rebecca, officers are blaming command staff for the social media post. She's upset to get some of the blame, and I'm sure she's not alone. I think most is focused on me, though. Spouses are commenting on our page, blasting us, never seen that before. Some mad at first post, others mad at the statement. What do you want me to do? Do you want me to resign? Or go to briefings?

Unless there is a significantly critical incident that absolutely necessitates a media response, I want you to put your phone down, don't look at FB and go have as good a day as possible. I looked at the comments last evening and they seemed to be turning more positive, I'll call that a win. For the most, we are done with this matter and moving on. I'd say we don't post anything for several days and let it die. All we need to do is come up with a way to vet contributions. Relax. You're good....no great!

I have some concern that the proposed response to the donation may cause others who feel differently to voice their own opinions and then we are caught in the middle (a political situation).

I didn't realize who Rich's company was, which is my mistake. But essentially we have aligned ourselves with a hate group. I think we should keep the statement, and only take donations beyond kids or churches, funneled through the police association.

Are they a recognized hate group by the United States?

iMessage

Tim >

Are they a recognized hate group by the United States?

Fair. Not that I know of. I don't know that answer but would assume not.

I don't think we need to reject the donation either...that's why I think giving it to someone else would be a solution.

The post is viral. I'm getting messages and notifications every few seconds.

My thought, as with many things in this world, people disagree vocally and move on as the world is fast moving.

I would not respond at all and not change anything

I want to think that too, and was of that opinion yesterday morning. But as it's gotten worse, my thoughts have changed. I don't think it will blow over

Have others responded with opinions

Only Mike. He was ready to give the donation back.

iMessage

Tim >

Only Mike. He was ready to give the donation back.

CMO wants to ignore it

I called Judy Pal, the crisis comm instructor at ILEA and FBI, for her insight, and she agreed a statement in this case, that it will only get worse.

My PIO friends said to take down the post, but I think that would make it worse. And all the negative comments are tied to the post and I don't want them spilling over to everything else

Irving PD took a donation a couple years ago, turns out it was tied to a political group too. They waited and it got worse, became a news story. They had to change their policy on donations. I'm trying to avoid the news stories

What is your plan?

Giving the donation back will offend the company

My opinion

iMessage

Tim >

Post the statement online, as its own message, and attached to the original post. And send to all the private messages. Then next week give the donation to an MLK group Monday for MLK day, or to VAST kids

I definitely don't want to give it back. I think supporting another group is best

My thought: don't respond this weekend and revisit the situation on Monday
